As a result of the destruction due to repeated French invasions related to the War of the Palatinate Succession coupled with severe winters, thousands of Protestant German Palatines emigrated from the lower Palatinate in the early 18th century. The various Germanic peoples of the Migrations period eventually spread out over a vast expanse stretching from contemporary European Russia to Iceland and from Norway to North Africa.

We are also happy to say that a similar group of Danube Swabians have joined together.

Further information: German reunification. To a large degree, many of the extant legal records from the Germanic tribes seem to revolve around property transactions. The frontier extended a further 36km down the Solway coast as a series of intervisible military installations.

The inscribed components convey the extraordinary complexity and coherence.
