He believes that only rich people should get to own their own homes. Bove argues that big banks are necessary to ensure America's position in global finance; to assist corporations in achieving their goals against foreign competition; and, most importantly, to defend the average household's access to financial services. Real estate absorbed a significant amount of these funds.

This money had to be invested. The trick is to find some reasonable middle ground. For a better shopping experience, please upgrade. By forcing the system to rely on its weakest companies, it is insuring a major financial disaster at some future point. A well-written, lively and provocative argument that may not sway everyone but is certainly worth consideration.
