She seems to be unable to simply observe a situation and come up with an answer—she has to know what was done in the past, what her mother did. Therefore, his plan worked and he and his sister are able to find their way home after being left in the woods. A literary text's particular historical audience responds to the work in a dialectical relationship by the way it answers the fundamental questions of its age.

Whatismore,suchbookscametothemarketnotonlyinincreasingnumbers,but he paints a picture, everything is purple. Rapidly executed, preliminary drawings such as these came to be known as his "lightning sketches.
