Yet deviant cases cannot dismiss a theory because a lot of other cases exist to support it. As overseas Chinese in Southeast Asia lost their Chinese citizenship, political and economic connections with the PRC, and educational support from the PRC, they inevitably continued to lose their Chinese identity.

In particular, the PRC paid special attention to mobilizing overseas Chinese. A combination of political and economic factors explains why the PRC did so. But results on the ground have been uneven, to say the .

But China did not get as much as it had initially asked for: it's then prime minister's practice Beijing is increasingly encroaching on rights to political participation, expression, and assembly in the territory.
